

What exactly is Partnership for Prevention?

In times of corporate change, it is important for both the company and for employees to be able to get their bearings.

If

- roles and tasks are distributed and established,
- support is offered and there is a flow of information,
- rules are drawn up and breathing space is created

then

- objectives can be developed on a mutual basis and success can be celebrated,
- problems that occur, expectations and suggestions for improvement can be discussed openly and resolved,
- safety and health can be improved through a good, stable working atmosphere and through cooperation based on trust.

Those companies that want to remain competitive pay attention to health and safety – their own, that of their colleagues and that of their superiors.

Partnership for Prevention

What does this mean in practical terms?

The aim of the AUVA “Partnership for Prevention – Safe and Healthy Together” campaign is to set in motion a process that anchors a positive prevention culture at the very core of Austrian companies.

The idea behind the partnership approach is to further increase the number of safe employees at work by passing on positive access to the topics of health and safety and by raising awareness among staff (management AND employees!), and through an appreciative discussion culture and the awareness of the employees' own responsibilities.

If all levels of hierarchy in an organisation are involved in the process and work/act based on shared principles, the working environment not only improves but the opportunity to use staff ideas to financially safeguard the company also increases.

Those who take part in Partnership for Prevention – Safe and Healthy Together not only reduce their absences but, above all, improve their corporate culture.
